FORT CAMDEN
Fort Camden (Meagher) is:
• Renamed in honour of Irish Patriot Thomas Francis Meagher
• A 45 acre site
• Surrounded by a moat on 3 sides
• One of the finest remaining examples of its kind
• A Palmerstonian type Fort
• Home of the worlds first practical guided Torpedo, the Brennan
• Dates back to 1550 but most of Fort Camden as we know it was built around 1870
until 1938

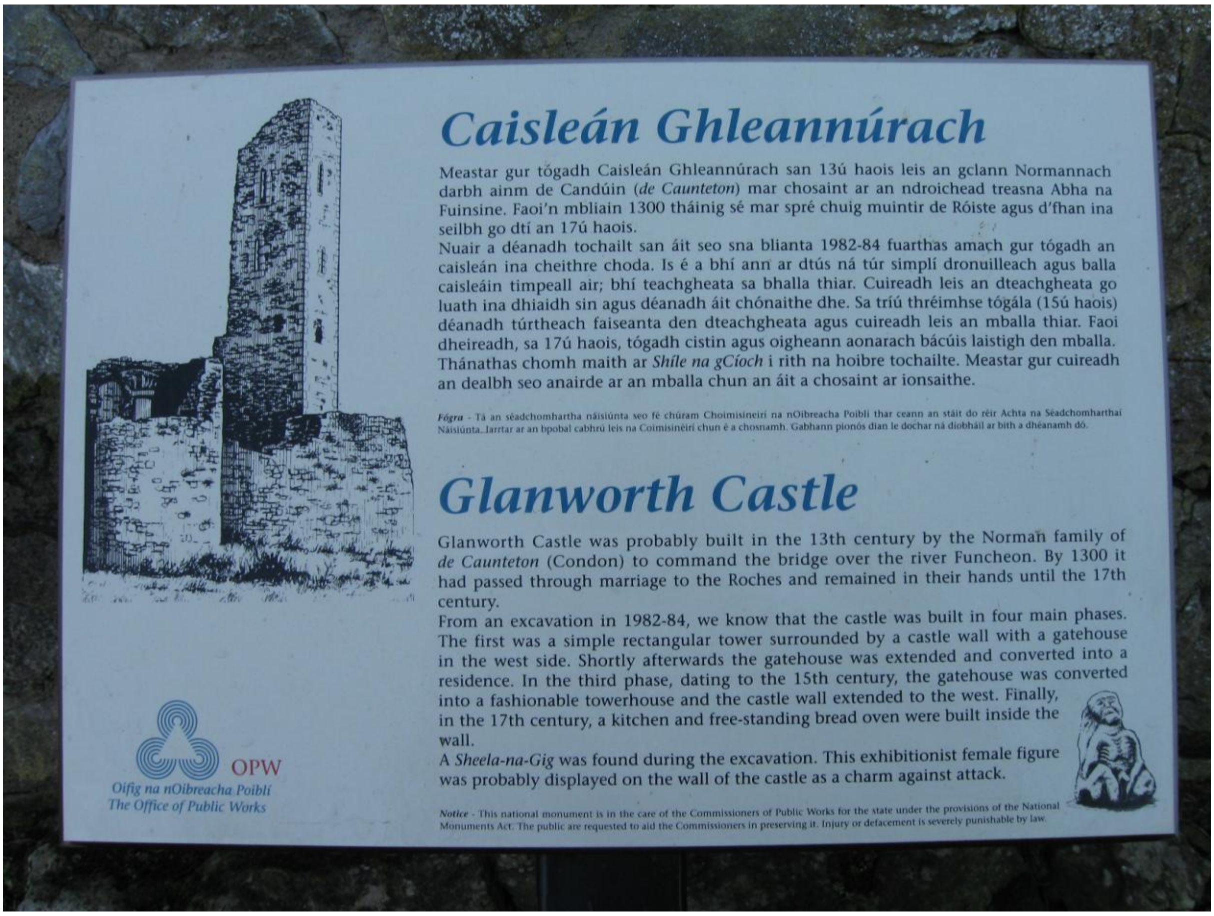
LEABA CHAILLÍ
LABBACALLEE
Tá sí ar cheann de na huaigheanna áiléir dingeacha is mó sa tír. Tógadh na huaigheanna seo ina lán áiteanna ar fud na hÉireann sa Luathré Chréumha, i timpeall 1500 roimh Chríost. Sa taobh thiar theas don tír is líonmhaire iad. Tá seomra mór amháin agus seomra beag amháin sa tuama seo agus trí chloch dhín thoirtiúla anuas orthu. Thart ar an seomra adhlactha tá carn cloch agus tá sraith gallán ar dhéanamh na litreach U ag síneadh taobh leis sin.
This is one of the biggest wedge-shaped Gallery-Graves in the country. These graves were erected in many parts of Ireland during the Early Bronze Age around 1500 B.C. and are particularly common in the south-west of Ireland. This tomb consists of one large and one small chamber covered by three massive capstones. The burial chamber is surrounded by a stone cairn flanked by further upright stones in a U-formation. Excavation in 1934 produced inhumation burials and fragments of pottery, bone and stone.



Caisleán Ghleannúrach
Meastar gur tógadh Caisleán Ghleannúrach san 13ú haois leis an gclann Normannach darbh ainm de Candúin (de Caunteton) mar chosaint ar an ndroichead treasna Abha na Fuinsine. Faoi'n mbliain 1300 tháinig sé mar spré chuig muintir de Róiste agus d'fhan ina seilbh go dtí an 17ú haois.
Nuair a déanadh tochailt san áit seo sna blianta 1982-84 fuarthas amach gur tógadh an caisleán ina cheithre choda. Is é a bhí ann ar dtús ná túr simplí dronuilleach agus balla caisleáin timpeall air; bhí teachgheata sa bhalla thiar. Cuireadh leis an dteachgheata go luath ina dhiaidh sin agus déanadh áit chónaithe dhe. Sa tríú thréimhse tógála (15ú haois) déanadh túrtheach faiseanta den dteachgheata agus cuireadh leis an mballa thiar. Faoi dheireadh, sa 17ú haois, tógadh cistin agus oigheann aonarach bácúis laistigh den mballa. Thánathas chomh maith ar Shíle na gCíoch i rith na hoibre tochailte. Meastar gur cuireadh an dealbh seo anairde ar an mballa chun an áit a chosaint ar ionsaithe.
Fógra - Tá an séadchomhartha náisiúnta seo fé chúram Choimisineirí na nOibreacha Poiblí thar ceann an stáit do réir Achta na Séadchomharthaí Náisiúnta. Iarrtar ar an bpobal cabhrú leis na Coimisinéirí chun é a chosnamh. Gabhann pionós dian le dochar ná díobháil ar bith a dhéanamh dó.
Glanworth Castle
Glanworth Castle was probably built in the 13th century by the Norman family of de Caunteton (Condon) to command the bridge over the river Funcheon. By 1300 it had passed through marriage to the Roches and remained in their hands until the 17th century.
From an excavation in 1982-84, we know that the castle was built in four main phases. The first was a simple rectangular tower surrounded by a castle wall with a gatehouse in the west side. Shortly afterwards the gatehouse was extended and converted into a residence. In the third phase, dating to the 15th century, the gatehouse was converted into a fashionable towerhouse and the castle wall extended to the west. Finally, in the 17th century, a kitchen and free-standing bread oven were built inside the wall.
A Sheela-na-Gig was found during the excavation. This exhibitionist female figure was probably displayed on the wall of the castle as a charm against attack.
Notice - This national monument is in the care of the Commissioners of Public Works for the state under the provisions of the National Monuments Act. The public are requested to aid the Commissioners in preserving it. Injury or defacement is severely punishable by law.
